ABSTRACT

This briefly annotated guide to non-sexist and non-racist educational materials suppliers includes small presses, non-profit educational firms, women's sections of professional and trade organizations, task forces in State educational departments, and feminist publishers, bookstores and distributors. Aimed at assisting librarians and teachers in their search for lesser known sources for appropriate materials, the source book covers the subjects: American minority studies, children's literature, Third World studies, research discussion of language and the image of women, the history of women, and women's studies. The work is organized into the following categories: (1) general; (2) children's literature; (3) literature, humanities and fine arts; (4) health and physical education; (5) science and mathematics; (6) social studies. INTRODUCTION

An important component of the initial series of workshops for educators conducted by the Training Institute for Sex Desegregation of the Public Schools is the exhibit of non-sexist and non-racist resources. This exhibit is brought to each school district to provide the staff with an opportunity to become familiar with a representative cross-section of non-stereotyped materials for use in both library and classroom. Because the requirements of the New Jersey Regulation on Equality in Educational Programs have made librarians and teachers aware that they must actively seek out non-discriminatory materials for students, visitors to the exhibit regularly request bibliographies and guides to sources of non-sexist and non-racist materials so as to begin replacing and supplementing those biased and stereotyped items already in use.

Although several major publishers have produced and adopted guidelines to eliminate sexism and racism from textbooks, these guidelines are not yet applied with any consistency to trade (i.e. library) books; furthermore, they are not intended to apply to fiction where the creativity of an individual author cannot or should not be bent to fit the mold of the guidelines. Thus, it is often necessary to look beyond the large publishing houses to alternative sources for good appropriate materials.

The purpose of the Sourcebook for Sex Equality: Small Presses is to assist librarians and teachers in their search for these lesser-known sources. Small presses and non-profit educational firms form its core; also included are women's sections of professional and trade organizations, task forces in state education departments, and feminist publishers, bookstores and distributors, most of which offer free or low-cost catalogues--which in themselves are good bibliographic resources. Large publishers and commonly used review sources have been omitted because they are already well-known and heavily utilized. Marginal groups, such as political and radical alternative presses, have also been excluded.

Some of the subject areas covered are American minority studies, which include Chicana, Native American, black and Puerto Rican studies; children's literature; Third World studies; research discussion of language and the image of women; history of women; and women's studies.

The Sourcebook is organized in the following categories:

I. General: including organizations specializing in education.
II. Children's Literature: including many small presses which publish for a limited age group.
III. Literature, Humanities and Fine Arts.
IV. Health and Physical Education.
V. Science and Mathematics: The paucity of materials in this section, more than any other, is indicative of the absence of women in these fields which is a result of the lack of encouragement and lack of equal opportunities for women.
VI. Social Studies: enormously expanded in recent years because of the growing interest in non-white peoples and cultures.

Many of the materials from the sources listed here are in the collection of the Training Institute for Sex Desegregation of the Public Schools and are used constantly by librarians, supervisors, teachers and students. They are available for reference and borrowing. Because this publication marks the start of a new bibliographic series, a loose-leaf format is used, so that the entire series can be kept together in a binder.
